“One day, we received an SMS message telling us that we won't get food anymore. The same thing happened with fuel vouchers. In our settlement, only three families received one this winter, while we all did in 2013.”

SYRIA CRISIS

FAIR SHARE ANALYSIS

2015

The numbers of people in need as a result of the conflict in Syria continues to rise, but the international humanitarian response has not kept pace. The donor conference in Kuwait on 31 March 2015 is an opportunity to reverse that trend and put Syrian civilians first.

Oxfam has developed indicators to help guide the fair level of commitment that each wealthy country should make in 2015 to alleviate the suffering of those affected by the Syria crisis:

- The level of funding each country makes available for the humanitarian response, relative to the size of their economy (based on gross national income);
- The number of Syrian refugees each country has helped to find safety through offers of resettlement or other forms of humanitarian protection, again based on the size of the economy.

This chart looks at the funding committed to the Syria crisis in the first quarter of 2015. Based on an estimated total need of $8.7bn, the analysis shows that only 9.8 percent of the funding needed has been received.¹

Oxfam is calling for 5 percent of the population of refugees registered in neighbouring countries, equivalent to 196,000 people, to be resettled or offered humanitarian admission in rich countries that have signed the UN refugee convention by the end of 2015, as part of a multi-year commitment to resettle the most vulnerable of the refugee population.³ This chart looks at pledges from these countries against a fair share calculated on the basis of the size of their economy. To date, only 37 percent of places have been pledged by the world's richest governments, and in a timeframe that remains unclear.

Note: The USA has not indicated an upper limit on the numbers of Syrians it will accept through its resettlement programme, but UNHCR has submitted 10,714 cases for resettlement as of February 2015. The US is the world's largest resettlement country, with an annual ceiling of approximately 70,000 refugees in recent years.

NOTES

Data is correct as of 26 March 2015.

¹ This is higher than the 7 percent funding shown for the UN appeals because it incorporates funding commitments made outside of the UN appeals. For further details on methodology see: D. Gorevan (2014) 'A Fairer Deal for Syrians', Oxfam, <https://www.oxfam.org/en/research/fairer-deal-syrians>

² This is higher than the 58 percent funding received by the UN appeals because it incorporates funding commitments made outside of the UN appeals.

³ Oxfam's analysis does not look at numbers who have claimed asylum in these states, nor family reunification of refugees, see D. Gorevan (2014) op. cit., p. 11. UNHCR states there are approximately 390,000 vulnerable refugees who would be eligible for resettlement.
